Gas Detector

EXPLOSION

Combustible gas is generated at petrochemical plants, etc. may explode if the concentration exceeds a certain level in the atmosphere. Therefore, it is necessary to detect whether the combustible gas is below a certain concentration.

LACK OF OXYGEN

Oxygen in the atmosphere is essential for breathing. If the oxygen taken into the body is not enough, it will have serious effects on the human body, particularly the brain. Therefore, it is necessary to detect whether the oxygen level is sufficient.

POISONING

Toxic gases such as ammonia, carbon monoxide, hydrogen sulfide, silane, and phosphine used in industrial factories can affect the human body when inhaled even in extremely small quantities of 1/1,000,000 units (ppm).
